Trojans experience an ideal atmosphere of 'All That Touches You'

Ponder all you experience—all that touches you: a mountain of unendeavored tasks; an ocean of new horizons. Examine the day, the week, the year that whisks rapidly by, their events scarcely lingering on the outskirts of your mind.

Treasure the unbearable moments which enrich the bitter-sweet pangs of character development. Endure hurt for without it life remains incomplete, a two-dimensional shadow existence that dies in darkness. No matter how high the mountain, the other side is always reached.

Analyze your surroundings. The people who have sustained you will greet you as an equal when the places you have known as a child become your home, your business community, your responsibility, your corner of security in the world.

First impressions of school vary as each person views changes

Momentary impressions of clean halls and fluorescent light confronted students upon their return to school in the fall. Dimly familiar faces whirled past in the faceless stampede. Blundering to seemingly nonexistent places convincingly written on program cards, new students discovered the confusing numbering of rooms located on different levels.

The appearance of Elmhurst had changed; a new sculpture by Les Smith adorned the courtyard, the Student Council installed a billboard on the front lawn, and scarlet geraniums and sunny petunias bloomed under the care of spring clean-up volunteers.

Yet the school was more than a well-constructed mass of brick, glass, and steel; the real substance of Elmhurst was the student body, faculty, maintenance crew, and administration.

Opening day of school presents anticipation and dreaded moments

In the turmoil before school started, students faced monumental decisions. Worried about making a good first impression, they wondered if they should wear the royal blue dress or the red polka-dot, if they would be lucky enough to share a class with a best friend, or if they could make new friends easily.

Last-minute program changes were debated, and the value of class content was discussed. Sometimes it was hard to discern the relationship between conventional subject matter and future goals.

Despite the hectic rush, students managed to obtain parking permits, purchase season tickets, the Advance and Anlibrum, and participate in extracurricular activities.

Settling into a weekly routine, students resigned themselves to IBM schedules, early rising, impatient bus drivers, and 1:00 lunches.

TOP LEFT: Deciding which clothes will fit this year, posed a problem for many as it did to Barb Redding. BOTTOM LEFT: Pencils, paper, and many other items are needed to start the school year. Encouraging Lani Rickner and Fred Mitchell to stock up is junior John Rogers at the Cash Box. TOP: Unusual news is conveyed by junior Jeff Nowak as Rick Seitz and Bruce Hamilton listen intently. Students engage time in tennis, traveling, working, and relaxing

During the opening weeks of school, the halls buzzed with vivid accounts of summer activities. Whether they had dreaded or longed for the reopening of school, students chattered animatedly of trivia and of major events.

Trojan summers ranged from the exciting to the commonplace. To expand their knowledge, some students enrolled in summer school to make up required subjects and earn extra credits while others toured the countries of France, Germany, England, Spain, Switzerland and Italy. Broadening their scope of political procedure was the aim of those students attending national young people's political conventions. Ball State University yearbook and newspaper workshops provided opportunities for publications students to acquire new production techniques and skills.

TOP: Cake, cookies, and brownies were often for sale at the candy counter. Senior Debbie Loos was happy to make a sale to junior Bill Vogelgesang, RICHT: A person wondering around the halls might come upon a friendly monitor like Cary Robinson. TOP RIGHT: Helping with all mimeographing is senior Nancy Scrogham.

Office help done by students is greatly appreciated. FAR RIGHT: Teachers, such as, Mr. Weber, needed assistance in grading papers. Senior Dianne West served as a helpful aid.

Assistants experience doubts in co-working with faculty members

Experience, cooperation and background knowledge of teaching were achieved by students donating aid to teachers and office personnel. Exposed to the difficulties of co-working with adults and peers, students were determined to do their utmost.

Grading papers and recording grades relieved teachers of a large burden, allowing them more time for lesson preparation. Through close personal association with faculty members, assistants set teaching as their goal. Students helped on daily schedules or when an educator required aid.

Office practice workers assumed the responsibility of typing, answering the telephone and other time-consuming tasks. Hall monitors, essential to the halls' order, checked passes and directed visitors and lost Trojans to various parts of the building.

'Touch Me Blue' adds sphere of fascination in homecoming festival

An aura of enchantment prevailed throughout the evening of the third annual homecoming as the theme "Touch Me Blue" dominated the activities. The night of fascination began with the Trojan's victorious encounter with Bellmont's Braves. Half-time events provided added excitement with the presentation of musical adeptness by the marching band and the coronation of the 1968 Homecoming queen and recognition of the court attendants.

The coronation float, constructed and designed by the art classes, was an abstractly inspired Gothic frame window highlighted by clusters of silver bouquets.

Following the outdoor events, attention was directed toward "The Michigan Street Bridge" while dancing and the greeting of alumni friends created a mellow atmosphere with a "Touch of Blue".

Posting political signs is part of Allen Cloverdale's, Nancy Hinton's, and Kevin Osbun's commitment to their chosen party.

Political machine voting, in the strict sense of the word, demands of senior Mary Lou Jupin complete concentration.

Campaigning during the 1968 Presidential election "takes courage" as Alabama's Ex-Governor, Mr. George Wallace, stated.

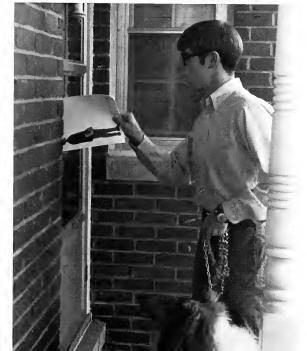

Through distribution of political emphasis, individuals gain ideas

Whether actively or passively involved in the national election, every student gained from contact with conflicting political ideas. The individual questioned major issues, developed his own solutions, and affiliated himself with candidates whose ideas closely matched his views.

Participating Trojans supported the candidate of their choice by attending meetings of the Young Republicans Club, the Young Democrats Club, and the American Independent Party. Locally, Youth for Adair aided the congressional representative's campaign.

Expressing political enthusiasm by distributing campaign literature, voicing and polling opinions, and wearing political ensignias, bigoted students exhibited blustering emotion for the satisfaction of winning or the agony of defeat.

Trojans employed as salesmen, mechanics, teachers through city

Teaching the deaf children presented a great challenge to junior Loraine Barker. Occupying one day a week of her time, she gained much experience.

Often summer employment was extended to become a part-time job during the school year. Week-ends and evenings were spent working in a variety of ways, from carrying out groceries to goldfish-sitting. Girls served as cashiers and waitresses, while boys profited as clerks and amateur mechanics.

Besides supplementing income, employment developed a sense of responsibility. Students gained a basic knowledge of finance through practical experience. They earned respect from members of the community by proving their ability to compete in the working world.

Attempting to sell a customer the latest in fashion is senior Mike Walley.

Reloading skeet traps consumed much of junior Todd Sterling's and senior Dave Weaver's time at the gun club.

Dressing a mannequin is just one of the tasks junior Jody Stephans encountered with her job as a saleslady.

Thoughts of relaxation spur students toward home at the day's end

Entertaining thoughts of relaxation and recreation, home-bound students speeded from the confinement of school discipline to the easy-going atmosphere of the home. Reaching their destination, students discarded school clothes, strewing them on any convenient object, and squirmed into more comfortable attire. An investigation prior to an assault on the refrigerator became routine procedure. Chatting on the telephone for two hours and forty minutes or waiting forlornly for it to ring consumed after-school hours.

Occasionally, class assignments demanded attention. Students were compelled to spend free time at the Fort Wayne Public Library preparing for burdensome research projects and exasperating essay tests. Homework was one of the fundamental responsibilities to be considered.

Public Library facilities come in handy for juniors Kirk Merchant and Gary Morningstar as term papers become due.

Work can be fun as twirlers Linda Ceschwell, Judy Goodwin, Renee Lichtsinn, and Joann Churchward practice their skit.

Distributing vests to Booster club members Judy Brickley, Peggy Miller, and Marsha Stanley, are officers, Debbie Moe and Mary Beth Ewald.

Phone conversations about "nothing in particular" provide an escape from much homework tension for Jill Ewald.

Hanukkah prayers were not overlooked by Mr. Frank. Listening in reverence are Mr. and Mrs. Van Daan and Anne Frank. The characters are portrayed by Tom Greider, Brad Fisher, Amy Emlich, and Carol Howell, respectively.

Aging sixteen-year-old Brent Kline 40 years in 30 minutes presents no problem for make-up assistant, Barb Piepenbrink.

Assistant stage director, junior Janice Morgan, rehearses with Tom Greider, Brent Kline, Brad Fisher, and Dennis Gordon as they practice making the scene where Brad Fisher is found stealing bread from the food supply, look true-to-life.

'Diary of Anne Frank' indicates hit by many responsive audiences

Extensive rehearsals and set construction resulted in the dramatic production, "The Diary of Anne Frank". Although the play had previously been televised, staged, and filmed, new interpretations were added under the direction of Mr. Robert Storey.

Mr. Donald Goss, art instructor, designed the four-level stage that the cast and stage-craft classes constructed. Special effects incorporated into the play, such as the droning of German planes, the actors' apparent loss of weight, and the entrance of a scene-stealing cat, lent realism to the depiction of eight Jewish people in their asylum Personal relationships either strengthened or weakened during the group's two-year retreat in the crowded warehouse attic. Mr. Frank tempered clashing personalities with his good spirits and common sense.

As a result of Mr. Dussel's entrance, portrayed by junior Brent Kline, the Franke family proposed a toast to cause.

Consultations, pranks, daydreams, decisions set mood for school

Cultural and academic progress predominated in classrooms, but the degree of achievement was unequaled by activities viewed in the halls. The morning ritual of parading through the building until twenty seconds before the final bell rang reached traditional measures.

During the five-minute break between periods, corridors teemed with boisterous students. Between classes lockers fell prey to surprise seiges in last minute scourages. Unavoidable obstacles became imminent as students encountered jammed stairwells, dawdling conversationalists, and irritating torrents of school books and personal paraphenalia from gorged lockers. Discourse of many types echoed throughout passageways as friends exchanged greetings, couples planned tenative dates, and team members speculated on approaching sport events.

Surprises come in all forms and are found every place imaginable. Unaware of Elmhurst's antics and harmless pranks, sophomore Greg Petras finds after opening his locker, that it has been "stacked".

Seeing Mrs. Fast or any other counselor, Chris Weber will agree that it can be a lot of help when it comes to making decisions about the future.

'College' seems to be the main thing on Marshal Ping's mind, as he daydreams of his future plans that are awaiting him.

After morning classes, sophomore Steve Tabron enjoys his afternoon lunch break by taking care of his ever-growing appetite.

Enjoying music by Dick Brown's orchestra are seniors Glenn Moses, Mary Beth Ewald Jim Butts, Mindy Strauss, Tom Day and Pam Mills.

Happiness is Mary Beth Ewald, Marti Mills, Jacque Kast, Queen Nancy Brewer, Mindy Strauss, Pam Mills and Debby Clark, as they observe their 1968 Junior Prom.

Modernistic murals surrounds the 1968 prom environment

Elegance, mystery and illusions of fantasy set the mood "Before the Sun". Geometrically designed canvases and modernistic lights enhanced the abstract coronation platform. Basic black and white was the main color scheme with irredescent color accents highlighting the surroundings.

Punch tables with matching centerpieces provided a gathering point. Proud escorts beamed and excited girls adorned in flowing gowns discussed the musical numbers played by Dick Brown's orchestra.

The Parent-Teachers Association sponsored the after-prom party, appropriately dubbed "Bon Voyage" in honor of departing seniors. Decorations of travel posters, and a festive table laden with sandwiches, along with entertainment by "The Herd", formed an exciting close to a memorable evening.

Apathetic Gary McOmber reveals a complacent smile as Karen Abbott, Rex Teeple and Cindy Snearing exchange plans for the evening.

After waiting patiently, Steve Dwyer accepts a cookie from Sarah Tucker as Bernice Dammeyer and Jeff Hoehns stand in line.

A little boost is needed to help Cherie Wasson in the hay wagon. Senior Mary Lou Jupin offers her assistance as Steve Shaber and Least of all expected to be in the front yard with pickaxes and shovels are Gary McOmber, Mike Walley and Dave Weaver.

Seniors Angie Hull, Jeanne Rairden, Jackie Jackson, Sara Woods, and Kenny Groves are glad to leave at 3:20 for the weekend.

Mr. Fishel stand by. The hayride was sponsored by Campus Life.

Games, dances, and spiritual activities fill weekends of students

Dashing home at the end of a hectic week, Elmhurst students expressed their pent-up emotion in a variety of ways, from squealing out of the school parking lot to breathing a loud sigh of regret over a stack of twenty hooks Attending football and basketball games was a favorite Trojan pastime. Fans braved chilly nights and uncomfortable bleachers to hoarsely chant "Trojan power". In victory or defeat, Trojans declared that "We've got spirit".

After the games, Trojans flocked to Dale's to quench parched throats with a coke. Students released their inhibitions by dancing at the Lantern or Aldersgate, by "buzzing" drive-ins, and by giving private parties. Relaxing with friends gave students renewed energy for the week ahead.

Academics

Challenges students desire for knowledge, capabilities

Personal development flourished in the curriculum offered to students through basic modes of study laid by traditional courses. Diversified programs of classroom and on-the-job training were innovated into the course of studies as Distributive Education and Industrial Cooperative Training expanded even further student's knowledge boundaries. Field specialization requisitioned the institution of the study of animal science, zoology, and the industrially accented studies of applied physics and mathematics. Each new addition added an element of higher learning to an aggregate of intellectual stimuli designed to accommodate the student in his endeavors and environmental contacts.

Math Department

Provides opportunity to subdue diverse

The working of a problem causes junior Steve Tobias to take a few moments to collect his thoughts and decide which method to use for solving it in Analytical Geometry class.

As a student Teacher for Mr. Richard Poor, Mr. Fair organizes the day's assignments.

theorems and conquer difficult equations

Puzzling over problems like proving ΔABC≅ ΔDEF, students found that deductive proof, a method of logical reasoning, was necessary in geometry classes, as were quadratic equations.

Trigonometry, a study of the right triangle, and analytic geometry challenged advanced students, unifying their total mathematical knowledge.

Wrestling with the mathematics of change and motion, four students chose calculus, an accelerated course first offered this year. Having varied uses from predicting satellites' orbits to proving economic theories, calculus was a building-block for college math.

By identifying geometrical shapes, Mr. Warren Hoover's class finds that this is an important factor if they're to comprehend the basic techniques of plane geometry.

Senior Jim Smith discovers trigonometry requires knowledge and concentration in order to compute problems quickly.

With the use of a formula, Mr. Jerry Bush explains to his business math class the way to figure out percentages.

Offers better understanding of world

As Dave DeSelm and Mike Rathert know, learning to read a slide ruler isn't easy.

Mixing potassium chloride with magnesium oxide, lab partners Mike Peters and Sylvia Pease explore new ways of making pure oxygen in Mr. Ethan Gwaltney's class.

Experimenting with the heating of citris chemi-

32 elements, nature, animals

From measuring chemicals to dissecting a mouse, EHS provided a broad curriculum for those who wished to pursue the wonders of the scientific world.

New methods and improvements reflected the accentuated interest in chemistry and chem study. Chem study was offered to the student who asked "why" instead of chemistry's traditional method of deduction and memorization. The dissection of small animals and observation of their structure attracted 153 into the new zoology course. Regular and advanced physics courses were offered to those wishing to investigate the forms and forces of energy.

Offered to any sophomore, junior, or senior, botany probed the depths of plant life, while earth science investigated the secrets of the earth.

Looking for a class response, physics instructor Randy Masterson begins to explain the formula work is equal to kinetic energy which is equal to force times distance.

David Grigg's Botany classes conducted numerous experiments throughout the year.

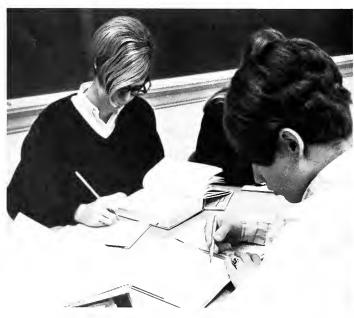

Business Department

Trains commercial skills

The use of the adding machines is taught in Bookkeeping I by Mrs. Marcella Goble.

Senior Jeff Hoehn apprehensively strikes his keyboard using the touch typing method to eliminate use of the hunt and peck system.

Correctly translating a shorthand assignment can be a rewarding experience; junior Jane Darby and junior Kathy Shorr are two of many hoping to achieve it.

In Bookkeeping, junior Mike Wittwer writes down the figures he will later compute.

basics of typing, shorthand

Acquiring the basic skills of typing and shorthand fulfilled the requirements for prospective secretaries. Gregg shorthand certificates were awarded to the most proficient students. College-bound students struggled to master techniques of typing in the one-semester accelerated personal typing course.

Figuring interest and invoices were fundamentals taught in business math. Bookkeeping classes kept a journal of business expenditures and assets. Business administration provided a stepping-stone for those who were interested in management, as well as promoting employer/employee understanding.

In clerical practice students increased their job potential by operating dictaphones, photocopy machines, and computers.

Assets and debts are a little confusing as Patty Gutmann soon discovers.

Instructor Mr. Donald Fryback, explains the procedures of Business Law during a discussion.

Whether a student is going on to college or into the field of business, typing is a very important part of his success. Here the Typing I class tries to increase their speed while maintaining accuracy.

Social Studies Department

Pursues examination of world's problems

Relaxing among the colorful autumn leaves, Mr. Glenn Miller's sociology class has taken time out from their ordinary classroom activities to go outside and discuss their prepared lesson concerning the problems and achievements of our society.

Going along with the theory that visual aids help the students to understand the subject more thoroughly, Mr. Lloyd Weber locates the position of the townships in our area.

and progress

Examining international problems and formulating practical solutions concerned world affairs students. Mock United Nations Security Council meetings were conducted at which each student represented the viewpoint of a member nation. Recent U.S. History explored attitudes and situations from WWII to the present. Economic students researched the economic forecast for 1970. and the causes of the Depression. Newspapers furnished a source for government classes as they compiled current event articles. Weekly discussions were led by sociology students who selected their own topic. Topography and natural resources were areas covered by geography students.

Discussing the intermediate results of the American Revolution, Mr. John Coahran explains to sophomore Dave Schieferstein its importance in determining our future.

During Economics class, Mr. Richard Mattix indicates to senior Eddie Ryan the ways in which our labor laws have changed throughout our nation's history.

Taking notes in Mr. Nicholas Werling's U.S. history class is a proven beneficial aid.

Brings pupils

Trying to aid word comprehension is French teacher Miss Phyllis Gilbert.

By operating the control of the language lab, Mrs. Jacqueline Foelber teaches the class that correct pronunciation is an important factor in Spanish III.

First year German students ponder the perplexities of the various genders and tenses while Mr. Leslie Roberts seems to be figuring a simple explanation to the problems that confront most beginning pupils.

closer to distant countries, customs, people

Leading her students in the singing of Latin Christmas carols, Mrs. Olphia Herrero adds variation to the everyday routine teaching Latin declensions.

Modern language courses switched from the traditional textbook to the conversational approach, taking advantage of tapes and filmstrips with native speakers. The textbooks acquainted students with the dialogues, while they utilized workbooks to learn the rudiments of grammar. Weekly practice in the language lab improved pronunciation by repetition and perfection of basic phrases. Listening to recordings of their responses in the lab gave students a chance to recognize and correct their errors.

After grasping the basic structures and learning by imitation during the first year, students in the second year dealt with more complex grammar, such as the subjunctive and the future perfect tense. The third year was offered to those continuing language in college.

Verbally associating French words with everyday objects, such as the magazines she is holding in her hand, Mrs. Nancy Schram finds it very beneficial for each student to be drilled separately on his pronunciation of common French phrases.

English Department

Emphasizes self-expression

During a skit given in the fourth period Biblical Literature class, senior Brad Place enjoys senior Ron Grotrian's portrayal of the Old Testament prophet Ezekiel.

Amid the confusion of workbook, films, and papers to grade in the Reading Lab Mrs. Sara Davis finds time to counsel sophomore Becky Shepler on reading difficulties.

Looking thoughtful, English teacher, Mrs. Prue Oberlin listens attentively to throughout study of literature, grammar student examples of synecdoche and other poetic figures of speech.

In English 10, Mr. Gene Jacobs explains the correct form for a book report.

By tackling poems and plays such as The Cherry Orchard and Oedipus the King, seniors explored the inter-woven themes and meanings of various forms of literature.

After spending the first semester on grammar, juniors concentrated on the Old English literature classics such as Macbeth, Beowulf, and The Canterbury Tales. Sophomores expanded their knowledge by delving into the plays of Julius Caesar and Our Town.

Offered as a one-semester course only, Biblical Literature opened up new and exciting paths to understanding and exploring the Bible and biblical characters.

Concentrating on bettering students reading speed and comprehension, reading lab provided a source to improve reading habits with controlled readers and film strips.

Many and varied feelings are expressed in the movements of hands during English class, they can be conveying the anticipation of an examination or the boredom of a lecture.

Speaking on a topic of his choice is sophomore Tom Matthew as he successfully demonstrates the use of hand gestures.

These gestures are used to hold the audience's attention while the speaker gets the point of his speech across.

Speech Department

Participation expands latent capabilities

Trying to conduct an interview according to procedure are Anita Tarr and Tom Draper

By taping his speech, Junior Jim Gilb is able to hear his vocal tones on replay.

Controlling the voice to excite, subdue, or create emotions aided students in delivering speeches. Articulation, enunciation, resonation, and phonation were points stressed by the course to produce intelligible sounds in speech.

Accompanied by props, students gave demonstration speeches, often ad-libbing lines to the amusement of classmates. Lively gestures punctuated the main points of the speaker. Spontaneous pantomimes, like charades, aroused comic reactions as students went through the motions of making pancakes, fixing flat tires, or closing a stuffed suitcase.

Outlining, memorizing, and resiving rough drafts perplexed students striving to find the "right" expression. Feeling like a convict before a firing squad for the first few speeches, students overcame their stage fright as they became more articulate and relied less on clichés and notes.

Promotes opportunity for study, research

As proven by these students, the atmosphere of the library is very helpful for the preparation of future assignments and to accomplish their reference work.

Elmhurst's school library provided a haven of relief for the harassed study hall student. The relaxing atmosphere where the student could concentrate without the interruptions of home or regular study halls was conducive to study.

References and the card catalog were available for the easy collection of material for reports. Librarians were on hand to direct students through the intricacies of the Reader's Guide and Dewey Decimal System. In spare moments students could browse through the stacks of books or consult a magazine or newspaper for current events information or pleasure.

Additional supplies of books required the installation of new bookshelves. Another addition to the library was Mr. Harold Sullivan, librarian, who aided in cataloging.

Junior Terry Springer looks thoroughly absorbed in an interesting novel.

In his first year at Elmhurst, sophomore Greg Petras takes advantage of the many reference materials offered in the modern library opened to students all day.

Challenges skill, provides entertainment

Almost blending in with the brass instruments around him, Junior Jerry Crothers directs all of his attention to the playing of the tuba during seventh period band.

Music offered an opportunity to get away from the ordinary movements of life. Music appreciation students learned to value the strains and melodies of the art.

Interest was received from the musician's acceptance of jazz, folk, opera, and concert music. Historical backgrounds of composers, singers, and their music was reviewed in detail.

Learning the wood winds, brass, string, reed, and percussion instruments moved the students in the direction of being aware of tone quality and pure sound.

Students demonstrated projects centered upon a type of musical instrument. Playing an album, showing a film, or playing an instrument were means of earning final credits for the course.

Cueing the band members, Mr. Robert Myers hopes to get them to start an arrangement at the same time and on the right notes.

Working on Christmas decorations, senior Jody Soccamano glues cardboard cylinders.

With the use of a live model, Mr. Donald Goss's advanced art class draws on top of a previously created background, thus allowing each student to express his own mood.

Art

Inspired Trojans now 'do their own thing'

A Saturday afternoon finds senior Steve Kamphues and sophomore Doug Mills putting the final touches on the decoration for the combined choir and band Christmas concert.

Manuevering muddy-wet hands to form clay models and expanding imaginations to give birth to inspiring paintings gave a sense of pride to Trojan creators. Masterly productions of etches and abstract paintings were hung in the school halls.

While perfecting brush strokes and shading, art students became cartoonists and poets. Making films of cartoon characters and writing "books of communication" were projects undertaken by the art classes.

Stagecraft pupils were given the responsibility of creating sets for the school play. Nailing, hammering, and removing splinters proved common facets of making scenery.

Pam Sutorius focuses her attention on the small task of threading a needle.

Sophomores Rinda Schular and Carol Hohenstein realize that mixing the correct amount of ingredients is an important factor in the outcome of their culinary attempts.

Home Economics Department

Trains for management, sewing, cooking

Putting their first year sewing skills into practice, sophomore Lorita Watson and senior Diana West concentrate on getting seams straight and button holes centered.

Home economics taught the protein value and functions of all foodstuffs. For a class project, students elected their favorite country and prepared a foreign meal representing the foods native to the culture.

Girls learned how to market wisely to get nutrients in the best and most economical form. They learned how to cook, retaining the beneficial qualities, how to preserve foods, and how to balance them in a nourishing diet.

Clothing was another of the home ec's major interests. Plain sewing and mending extended to every phase of the selection, manufacture, and care of clothing.

Home management units included planning, furnishing, and managing household affairs in an imaginary home. The latter included budgeting, child care, and home nursing.

Industrial Arts Department

Course modifications kept pace by changing

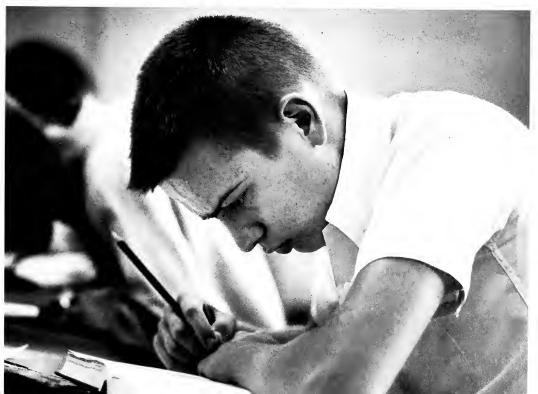

The complexities of the heat operation on a newly made screw driver blade is explained and demonstrated by Mr. Larry Murphy to the onlooking students of his metal shop class.

Drawing a straight line, the first exercise performed by drafting classes, proved harder than it appeared. Gaining skill in precision and scale drawings, the student then attempted more complicated problems. Periodical course modifications kept pace with changes in the college drafting programs.

Realizing creative efforts, metal class students, trained in the use of the lathe, drill press, and milling machine, built die-cutters and toolboxes. The satisfaction of building an engine, or the construction of a hydraulic press, which saved the expense of buying one, were by-products.

Concentrating on the problems of Drafting 1, Junior Gerry Carbaugh experiences this course of study offered by the Industrial Art department. Complementing the mechanical drawings made by drafting students were the bookwork essentials.

Instructs in factuality of writing, publishing

Journalism instructor Mr. John Butler awaits the delayed response to a question concerning newspaper features and their importance; this first year class seems puzzled.

Journalism was the business of timely knowledge—the business of obtaining the necessary facts, of evaluating them carefully, of presenting them fully, and of acting on them wisely. It involved the student in the production of publications.

The course was divided into two semesters. The first semester centered upon the techniques of journalistic writing for newspapers. Students served as beat reporters of the Advance.

Second-semester classes fired imaginations through creative writing for introductions to layouts, literary magazines, and yearbooks. Projects undertaken included a sixteen-page signature yearbook and a design and selling of an ad.

Mr. Robert Adams from the Fort Wayne newspaper discuss advertising aspects.

Putting a lot of imagination to work junior Jody Stephans and senior Cheri Rickner draw dummies and transfer them onto layouts for their Journalism assignment.

Builds strength, precision into your bodies

Archery in the early fall is almost a tradition at Elmhurst and though the first few tries are often frustrating, as sophomore Barb Peters realizes, it can soon become a lot of fun.

Girls' physical education classes exercised daily with stomach stretches, leg kickers and jumping jacks.

Throughout the year girls earned grades and experience by developing archery, speedball, shuffleboard, and bowling skills.

New to the department were Swedish gymnastics involving implements of "small apparatus". By using balls, wands, and ropes, eye-hand movements and co-ordination were developed.

Parallel bars, the side horse, and spring boards were used by the boys' physical education classes. Constructing pyramids, and playing volleyball and basketball were practiced indoors during the winter.

Building endurance in track was a requirement for the course. Rope climbing, vertical jumping, sit-ups, the standing broad jump, pull-ups, and the 440 yard run were attempted by Trojan boys for record holdings.

With a look of determination, these girls try to kick the ball in the right direction.

Prepares students for future occupations

Servicing cars at a gas station is senior Bruce Springer's job as a participant of the Industrial Cooperation Training program that's new to the Elmhurst curriculum this year.

Classifying patient's information at Lutheran Hospital senior Marlene Tutwiler learns many with on job training, classes of the basic principles which make a large hospital, such as this, run smoothly.

Distributive Education, a program of occupational training, was intended for young men and women who wanted a career in a vocational field and who could meet the qualifications set up for entrance into the program. DE combined two kinds of schooling—high school and the school of experience.

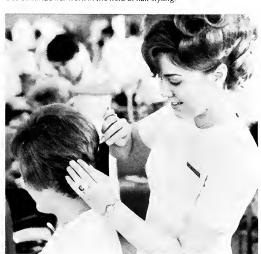

A DE trainee in the senior year spent the morning in school carrying a basic program and spent the afternoon under the supervision of local stores selected as training establishments. In the course, students were subjected to the many facets of distribution.

Industrial Co-Operative Training was a course for the student who was interested in learning a specific skill or trade. Credit was received in school and on the job while earning a steady income and more instruction.

By working in a beauty salon, senior Jani Squires gains the experience she will need after graduation if she is to continue her work in the field of hair styling.

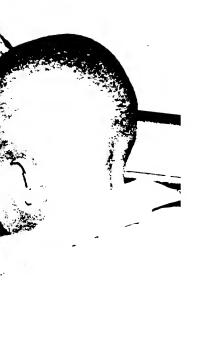

The afternoons of senior Gerry Cearbaugh is filled with hard work and an acquired skill. Through Vocational Training he has found a part-time job in a local butcher shop.

Activities

Utilize knowledge, abilities; better students, community

New activities at school focused on international as well as local interests, furthered tutoring services for students, or gave people a chance to informally meet teachers, sponsors, and acquaintances both inside and outside of school. Vocational aptitudes became the primary objective for other new clubs with blocks of independence being formed from planks of responsibility, accuracy, and ability. Through extra preoccupations, Trojans found a new horizon of learning opened before them and the key to knowledge needed to analyze and examine all they would confront in their lifetimes. Much of this enlightenment proved invaluable to students learning to work and live cooperatively in a rapidly progressing society.

Undertake school, community aid projects

Debating to whom the remaining can of Y-Teens mixed nuts will go is Senior Diane Dettmer while she is approached by senior members Jacque Kast and Sarah Tucker.

Five Y-Teen volunteers donated one night a month to being a friend to a mentally retarded woman at the State School. They attempted to teach the trainable women a measure of self-reliance, beginning with shopping alone and appropriate social behavior.

Collecting needed articles for the annual Miss Virginia Christmas project, and providing baby-sitters for the Christ Child Festival involved Y-Teen girls.

"The Y-In", the semester-break dance, was jointly sponsored by the Y-Teens and Hi-Y, formed from the parent YWCA and YMCA.

Handicapped by a lack of funds this year, the Red Cross Council sponsored a talent show, "The Percolated Pot", and raised $370 for next year's projects. Acts in the coffee-house atmosphere consisted of original poetry readings, songs, and instrumentals. Floor-to-ceiling paintings used for the Prom provided the backdrop.

In May the Council entertained residents of the Allen County Children's Home with an outing to the newly opened Children's Zoo.

Membership in the Council was maintained with the election by upperclass members of 4 boys and 4 girls from the sophomore class. Once elected, membership was permanent throughout the high school career.

Confronts business world through trips

Open to anyone considering a business career, the Commercial Club informed its members on possible business opportunities and the qualifications of a good employee. Guest speakers from prominent businesses in the Fort Wayne area, among them Tower Personnel, Lincoln National Life Insurance Company, and Midwestern Life Insurance Company, presented their views to the club. With the skills of business in great demand, large corporations offered the opportunity for members to visit their concerns on a school day to see first-hand how businesses operate whether on large or small budgets.

Restores Civil War letters of Hugh Bay

Transcribing and typing the letters of Hugh Bay, a Union soldier from Adams County, revealed local opinion of the Civil War to the newly formed Junior Historical Society. The letters, written during the Civil War, were loaned to the Club by a great-great-grandson of Hugh Bay. After deciphering the letters, members compiled them in chronological order, footnoted them, antiqued the paper, and mounted them. They were organized into the Bay Letters Book.

Members of the club also planned to attend the May 3rd convention of the Indiana Junior Historical Society in Indianapolis.

Learns of quantum theory, laser beam

Halftime during home basketball games brings a rush of parched-throat customers to the efficient moving Phi-Chem coke squad as they serve with great agility.

Debating whether to take a field trip to the Detroit Ford Museum and Greenfield Village or to the Wright-Patterson Air Force Base, Phi-Chem Club members finally decided on the latter. One Friday in May they left early by bus for the 12-hour excursion to Fairbourne, Ohio, where they viewed the Air Force Museum as well as antique and present-day airplanes.

Dr. Walter J. Williams, Vice-President and Dean of Indiana Institute of Technology, discussed the laser beam. Another guest speaker, Dr. Smith, also from Indiana Institute of Technology, spoke on quantum mechanics.

Aside from their customary duties of checking hall passes and directing newcomers to the office, Elmhurst's hall monitors often dealt with more dubious situations. Out-of-the-ordinary excuses from students ranged from a necessary visit to the vet's to an urgent trip to the Singer Sewing Center. An overly helpful monitor sent a visitor to the kitchen when he didn't really want to go there. Despite a monitor's accurate directions. a visitor wandered the entire first and second floors before finding the right room only a few steps from his starting point. Undoubtedly, a baby duck brought by a graduate was the most unusual and least confused visitor in the building.

The sale of red felt derby hats with class buttons at the North Side and Huntington home games sponsored a trip to Indianapolis for the Political Science Club.

Attending the February 14th session of the state legislature, 23 students left early that morning, reluctantly missing a day of school. Upon their arrival, club members were given a tour of the State Capitol building, and shown a film emphasizing the importance of one representative's vote. During the afternoon the group observed debate on the floors of the House and Senate.

Offering a "career without a college education", only the 17 seniors and 12 juniors enrolled in the Distributive Education program were eligible for club membership. Innovated to train leaders in the field of marketing and distribution, DE excused seniors from classes at 11:20 in order to work half-days for pay and credits. The juniors, while not able to work during school, studied the fundamentals of business in preparation for their senior year of practical experience.

Catchy dance and twirling routines were readied for home football and basketball games by the Elmhurst twirlers. They presented the flag in a ceremony at the beginning of basketball games, and wore new outfits for the balftime entertainment.

Marching with the band during August practice and rehearsing during seventh period concert band prepared the twirlers for the athletic season. Last summer at Smith-Walbridge Twirling Camp the girls learned thirteen pom-pom skits and the basics of twirling and dancing.

Beginning with two weeks of marching before school started, the marching band conditioned themselves for football season. At games they sported the 120 new uniforms paid for by donations from the Lions Club and the Savoy, and their annual candy sale.

The stage band and concert band both placed first in the NISBOVA contest. Besides the usual three school concerts, the band performed at a Coffee Concert, a junior high tour, graduation, and for a Memorial Day Parade. Booster Club

Attains recognition for glove, card displays

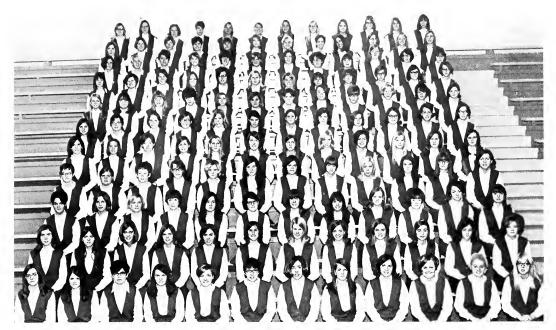

Red-and-white gloves put sparkle into hand motion routines accompanying the band numbers performed at the home and City Series basketball games.

Precedent was broken when one male member was admitted to the Girls' Booster Club. Assisting the present sponsor, Mrs. Jacqueline Foelber, Mr. William Carey filled the post of sergeant-at-arms, maintaining "law and order", and offered constructive criticism. He helped organize a system for the card routines.

Red vests and gray skirts were purchased by the members, and the uniforms were completed with the addition of 27 pairs of gloves to last year's supply.

Composed of 136 girls, the cheer block gave seating priority to seniors and juniors. The sophomores who tried out for reserve cheerleading were eligible for the remaining seats.

Cheerleaders

Present new outfits, spirit stick, pyramids

Brand-new outfits added a special zip to the varsity cheerleaders. Along with winning the spirit stick at Smith-Walbridge Camp, they helped build enthusiasm by designing "spirit" signs that were posted on the school walls and in the teams' locker room.

Both reserve and varsity cheerleaders worked together in making a traditional cheer for the opening of games. They emphasized cheers that contained mounts and special rhythms, taught the Booster Club "windshield-wiper" glove routines, and experimented with changing the school song.

Chanting "Peanuts, popcorn, onion soup—we are the Trojans, poo-poop-de-doop!", a boys' cheerblock was informally organized by members of the Lettermen's Club. Although not recognized by the administration until the sectionals, the boys' "Hoo-rah" and "Here we go, Trojans" present at every game gave evidence to their enthusiasm at backing the team.

Conducting their annual license plate sale, Lettermen contributed $68 to the treasury, which financed sports season tickets for the foreign exchange students at Elmhurst.

Sports

Bring distinction in victory; Moral strength in defeat

The sweat burns your eyes and cakes the dirt on your legs. The pain starts far out in your arms and legs and creeps and eats its way deep into your insides. You taste blood from your crushed lip and vomit in your throat. You feel that your brain is very small and is being smashed against the sides of your skull by the pounding of the rushing blood. Fear threatens that your best is not as good as your opponents. The worst fear is that if it hurts too much you might quit.

But you don't quit. Because you want to beat him—and you want to beat him badly. You want satisfaction and pride and glory for yourself and your team. So you continue to compete. All your life.

Middle proves to be beginning of the end

Studying statistics helps coaches John Campbell and Warren Hoover call the right play in any given situation.

Varsity football started fast, ended slowly, and was best summed up by Coach Warren "Skeets" Hoover as "disappointing".

It was a typical season for the Trojans as they won four of their first five games, including a school record of three in a row, and lost the remaining four contests. In the 5th game with less than two minutes left, a 47-yard field goal attempt by Roger Bellis fell short and left the Trojans on the short end of a 7—6 score with archrival South Side.

This loss destroyed the teams momentum and marked the beginning of the end.

Three players earned distinction by being named to honorary teams at the close of the season. Junior Roger Bellis was All-City defensive line backer for the first team and junior Steve Stiffler went both ways on the second team backfield. Senior Larry DeArmond was accorded honorable mention in the All-State polling of sportswriters.

Deep in his own territory, senior halfback Jeff Bush cuts sharply behind Tom Peter's block. The Trojans outrushed the Archers, but fell short in the final score.

Local Sectional proves strongest in state

Being a coach entails more than practices and meets. Harrier Coach Don Kemp spent hours performing a great assortment of odd jobs behind the scenes.

"Two meets told the story this year," said Coach Don Kemp, referring to the Shortridge Invitational and the Sectional.

Shortridge, which annually has drawn the best teams from Indiana and Kentucky, has generally served as an accurate preview of what is to come in the State Finals in November. The team took eighth place, but finished behind South, Snider, and eventual State Champion North Side. It was the same story in the Sectional one week later when the harriers finished fifth behind these same three teams and New Haven. The Regional proved to be an anticlimatic ending to what had been a promising season.

Elmhurst was plagued throughout the season by inconsistent individual performances. Only once did every member of the team run to his potential. That was in the first City Series meet when Trojans finished third, fourth, fifth, sixth, seventh, and ninth and swept past the five-school field.

Seniors Ed Moyer, Steve Shaber, and sophomore Steve McCabe complete the first mile in the lead at Foster Park.

The losses this year are harder for senior Bruce Guebard to take. He doesn't have "next season" to look forward to.

Reserve harriers mirror varsity season

"We didn't realize it at the time," said varsity letterman Todd Sterling, "but the reserves season was a carbon copy of ours. When we won, they won, and when we lost, they lost too."

The reserves had a strong start. They nipped Tipton and ran past East Noble, Bishop Luers, Bishop Dwenger, and Concordia. However, they dropped meets with South Side, Snider, North Side, and New Haven before rallying with their final victory against Central Catholic's Irish.

The harriers also won meets with DeKalb, Central, and South Adams by forfeit, and finished the season with a record of nine wins against four losses.

Coach Carter Lohr, in his first year with Elmhurst's cross country team, worked primarily with the reserve runners.

Sprinting into the chute, Dan Ransbottom leads the reserves past South Side.

While watching the reserve runners, assistant coach Carter Lohr and Todd Sterling discuss the results of the varsity meet with New Haven's Bulldogs.

Balance proves key to successful season

High school tennis in Indiana completed the transition from a spring to a fall sport with the 1968 schedule. In their first bonafide fall season, the netman compiled the best record in the sport's four-year history at Elmhurst. Although the team dropped four of their first six matches, they jelled and swept five in a row.

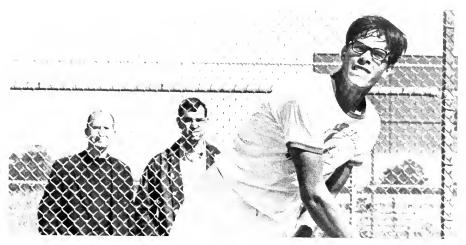

Prior to the season, Coach Kent Kurtz felt that balance would be the team's greatest asset. "We should improve again this season just as we have for the last four years," he said. The young team (only two seniors) improved methodically as they matured.

Unaccustomed to Lakeland's courts which were slow and dusted with loose sand, John Hoffman slips before he can return his opponent's shot.

Under the watchful eye of coaches Kent Kurtz and Kent Fishel, number two Trojan Steve Cavell administers the "coup de grace" to his Lakeland opponent.

Undefeated in regular season play, Senior Steve Salisbury adds a Central Catholic victim to the string of wins. Salisbury later won his first sectional match.

A consistent player, Steve Beltz was considered best close to the net.

Trojans win Holiday Tourney, City title

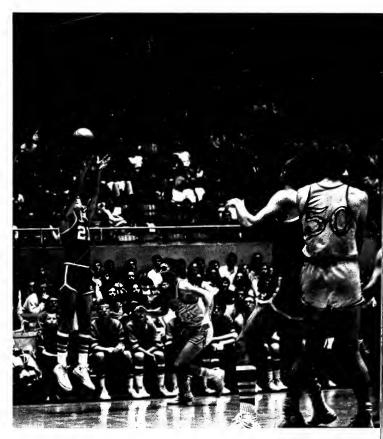

Towering over his Woodlan opponent, Rich Wismer cuffs a shot under the basket. Defense was the "Hookers" speciality and he was the third leading rebounder on the team.

"Get that ball!" said the cheerleaders. "Defense! Defense!" said the girls' cheerblock. "Nuts and bolts!" said the boys' cheer block. "Keep it clean!" said the administration. "Keep it cool! Play your own game!" said Mr. Etycheson.

The advice paid off as the basketball team rolled off seventeen straight victories, won the Irish Invitational and captured Elmhurst's first undisputed City Championship.

Under Coach of the Year Kenny Etycheson, the Trojans came within one game of tying the city record for consecutive wins set more than twenty years ago.

Led by All-City performers, Steve Handy, Brett Able, and Ken Groves, the team went into the Sectional as favorites. But the Sectional jinx, that has seen the City Champions defeated in tourney play all but once in the last ten years, stopped the Trojans in the second game.

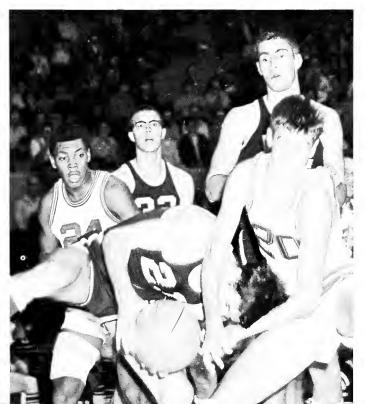

The team's second leading scorer, Brett Able gets the ball away before being fouled. Able scored 245 points and set the school record of 111 assists.

Campbell's reserves post record season

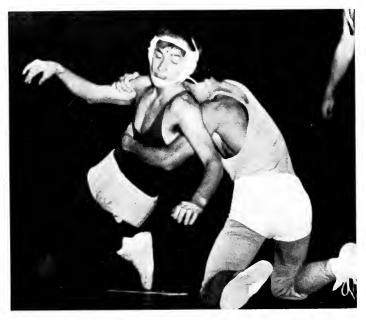

Scoring two of his 15 points in the opener against Muncie, sophomore Zane Reed led the reserve scoring. Reed was one of only three sophomores to make the reserve team.

"This year we started to win the close ones," said Tom Yoder, basketball manager. "Take Hawarth, we won that in the last five seconds. You've got to win the close ones in the reserves because the scores are low."

The reserve team was the winningest in Elmhurst history. They dropped the opener to Muncie South, 35-38, but followed with victories over Luers and Dwenger, 47—31 and 63-34. The team lost to Norwell and Central, 35—42 and 43—53. They then rattled off seven victories, beating South Bend, 41-31; Snider, 37-35; Bellmont, 39-37; Warsaw, 54-37; and South Adams, 43—39. North stopped the streak, 35-37, but the Trojans beat Huntington, 37-29; East Noble, 33—28 and New Haven, 59-39; to close the season with a 12 and 4 record.

Matmen's strength lies in heavier weights

Elmhurst's only sectional winner, senior Roger Sipe, added to his season of 14 wins, five losses, and two ties by pinning his opponent from North Side in 44 seconds.

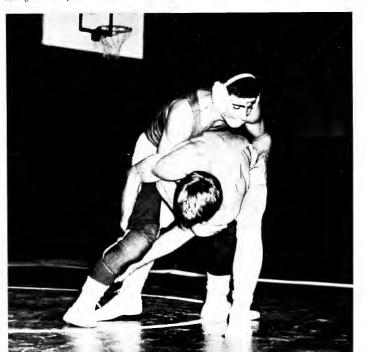

Wrestling continued on the upswing at Elmhurst this year. Under the direction of first year coach James Welborn, the grapplers went into the final match of the season needing a victory to capture their first city championship. However, Snider defeated the Trojans to retain their hold on the city crown. The meet was marred by an injury to heavyweight Brad Place who suffered a dislocated elbow in a freak accident. The injury prevented Place from defending his Sectional title.

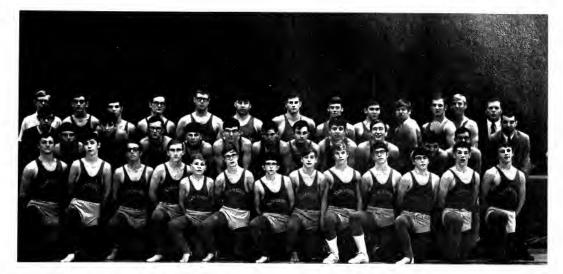

The Trojan's strength lay in the heavier weight divisions. Many times during the season the opposition jumped to an early lead only to see it vanish before the onslaught of the heavyweights. Dan Leininger, Charlie Hoopes, Greg and John Antalis, and Place all compiled solid winning seasons. However, 122 pound Roger Sipe was the schools only Sectional winner.

Golfers win second consecutive Regional

"That Coffin course (site of the 1969 State Championships) was appropriately named. We got buried alive," said junior Jeff Nowak after the golf team finished a disappointing sixth in the State Finals. It was disappointing because the week before the team had finished eight strokes in front to win its second consecutive Regional. In that meet, juniors Bill Kratzert and Nowak and sophomores Jim Bradow and Dan Johnson had combined to shoot a total of 301 and avenge two earlier defeats to South Side.

The team was led throughout the season by Kratzert, while the other three guys bounced around in the other three spots. Toward the end of the season, however, Nowak, Bradow and Johnson fell into place in that order with all four shooting in the 70's.

This team is the youngest that coach Nick Werling has ever had during his 10 years at Elmhurst.

Far ahead of his Snider foe, Jim Bradow takes his ball from the ninth hole at Brookwood. Bradow pitched in from the apron.

Coach Nicholas Werling contemplates the defeat of North Side. Werling has four times led the team to the State Finals.

Mile-Relay nets 3:21.0 at State Finals

Granted a reprieve in Sectional competition when Snider was disqualified, the mile relay set a Regional record of 3:22.6 and placed second at the state level.

"Last year's team was typically Elmhurst, but there were a couple really outstanding highlights like Steve Kelley's 9:21 two mile and Rick Hoopes' high jump record," said quarter miler Dave Weaver. "A dropped baton may well have cost us the sectional, but we did score our first State Meet points, and that makes you feel good."

This season the team lacked depth, but still finished high in the big meets on multiple efforts by several individuals. The highlight of the season was the mile relay's 3:21.0 performance that netted them eight points for second in the State finals. In addition, Steve Swim's fifth place in the high hurdles added one to give the Trojans a school record total of nine points.

Junior Gary Morningstar relays a crisp exchange to junior Steve Swim. The half-mile relay ran in the low 1:30's Ron Moake misses at 12' 0" and settles for second against Central and Snider.

Personalities

Untried alliances reinforce advancement toward future

Congruency of mortar and brick gave form to the building, but the backbone of school consisted of people—students, faculty, and administration. Harmonious alliance of these main personality influences provided the basis for developmental progress during the year. New teachers, different skills and techniques, and fresh faces among students added diversified influences to an amplified scope of backgrounds. Untried curriculums were innovated into the educational outlay of studies and made employment opportunities available to young adults. Perspectives broadened during one impressionable year and brought Trojans closer to environments . . . all that touches you.

Caught up in their own interests, the student body did not consider that the administration needed ways to release their energies. After a wearing day, Principal Charles Eickhoff retired to his farm.

Assistant Principal Robert Zimmerman purchased a horse for his family's enjoyment.

Mr. William Geyer represented Elmhurst at the American Personnel and Guidance Convention. Last summer Mrs. Mary Fast visited New England.

Enjoying the theaters and Greenwich Village, Mrs. Grace Pennington made frequent trips to New York. State representative John Sinks, Jr., relaxed by playing the piano while not involved in his major interest, politics. Besides organizing athletic events, Mr. Douglass Spencer worked in his workshop and garden.

Principal Charles Eickhoff pauses for a moment in the halls to discuss financial problems of the publications department with the new advisor Mr. John Butler.

They were constantly interrupted by imperative odds and ends, and daily crises, providing last-minute aid for faculty and administration. Librarians maintain atmosphere for study Pursuing the goal of creating better relations between teacher and student occupied the time of the Student-Faculty Relations Board. Student Council set up this board consisting of eight students and eight teachers. Discussion periods were arranged periodically for open questions and problems. Pep sessions and student dress were main topics of this year.

Now under the authority of the library is the audio visual department. Librarians are Mr. Harold Sullivan, Mrs. Mildred Hibben, and Mrs. Mary Jane Mann.

End of the senior year routines calls for the exchange of personal name cards by Rosina Decker and Linda Ake.

Preparing for commencement, Jim Yoder makes a final adjustment before entering the colosseum with other graduating seniors.

Even though the weatherman predicted 95 degree weather, the seniors braved the heat. After receiving their caps and gowns during homeroom, they donned their outfits for the Memorial DayAssembly.

Phase one completed after commencement

Seniors Fred Albert and Steve Anderson carry their programs as they leave the Elmhurst gym after practicing for their forthcoming graduation at the Memorial Colosseum.

Wrinkled gowns and caps 3 sizes too small were placed in the eager hands of seniors who had been carefully measured in the fall. Homeroom friends assisted each other in unfolding the 6 yards of unironed material, and in putting on the collars backwards. After an extended homeroom period to perform these operations, seniors marched to the Memorial Day assembly.

A different mood prevailed at graduation as each senior waited nervously for his name to be called. As all seniors present were declared graduates of Elmhurst, each thought, "I have endured." Clutching their diplomas and keeping tassels as mementos, seniors filed out with unspoken good-byes.

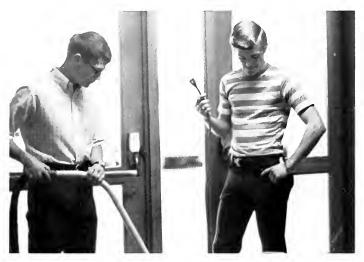

Randy Ridgely untangles his tassle so he can place it on his cap before practice.

Seniors Cheryl Fahlsing and Nancy Hinton examine seating charts for graduation.

Determined efforts resulted in recognition and laurels for members of the Class of 1969. Charles DeLancey served as president of the National Junior Horticulture Association. Ron Greek traveled to New York as a member of McDonald's All American Band to participate in the Macy's Thanksgiving Day Parade. Elaine Green became the state winner of the Daughters of the American Revolution Good Citizen Award, In sports, Ken Groves and Steve Handy were chosen members of the All-City Basketball team. Rousing pep sessions boost school spirit

Sarah Tucker experiences uncontrollable laughter as Ann Bresler is tackled during the senior girls' display of the future game between Elmhurst and Southside.

Trojan spirit helps gain City Championship

Before the last City Series basketball game against Concordia, Elmhurst had a rousing pep session. Steve Dwyer during the pep session pulls Brad Place, the spirit of Elmhurst, into the gym while he gives a yell for the Trojan's victory that night.

'69 graduates leave Elmhurst with pride

While the Concert Choir takes a break, the Trojan Singers make a quick change out of their robes to get ready to sing in front of the students at Kekionga Junior High.

Prestige and accomplishment were accorded seniors for endeavors in their final year. Awarded the Student Council Spirit Bucket twice for their display of school pride, the upperclassmen also comprised a large portion of the eighteen year old blood donors from the city high schools. First place was another laurel acquired when seniors won the Class Spirit competition. An honorable mention was given to them by the cheerleaders and School Spirit Committee for participation in the homeroom poster competition. Senior members proved instrumental in the establishment of the Student-Faculty Relations Board which helped to further lines of communication between the student body and the administration.

"Wild In the

"Wild in the Wind", an apt theme for the Junior Prom, described the psychedelic effect created by revolving structures and black light. Not the traditional "hearts-and-flowers" concept, the entrance was a mirror-like silver tunnel illuminated by miniature lights and the 72-foot wall mural was an orange and yellow starburst on dark blue. The coronation platform, a streamlined, spoked star, permitted the Prom Court to rotate positions while the Queen mounted to its center.

Lighted Acres of Ossian housed the PTA-sponsored after-prom party. Dancing to the music of "The Story", which contrasted with Dick Brown's orchestra at the Prom, untiring couples stopped only for a buffet lunch.

Sophomore Roger Ruch speaks to office secretary, Mrs. Summers, and asks permission to see guidance counselor, Mrs. Pennington. Students often make visits to the office to discuss their grades and test averages.

Aspects of personality formed as result of individual happenings

Key factors shaped personalities during the year but none were as prominent as the strain of emotional maturing. Solitude in thought and manner compelled the formation of individualistic attitudes and produced a sense of responsibility and sincere hope for the future. Frequent contact with peers and adults furnished an essential personal relationship in a challenging atmosphere. Life was not without the pangs of pain which constantly penetrated the protective shell of love and security to which each person retreated. Environment played a major role in personal growth by mentally nourishing personalities through injections of vacillating influences. Enlightening and depressing events nurtured the anxieties tasted by all. The foundation for respectable citizenship was laid and adulthood built by all that touches you.

Acknowledgements

New ideas, hard work, and a dedicated staff contributed to the personality of this yearbook. Tradition was broken by the decision to have an August delivery date. Contemporary artwork expressing the theme with additional color pictures served in the transformation from old to new.

To our new advisor, Mr. John Butler, goes the appreciation of the staff for extensive help and encouragement. I wish also to thank Mr. James Arthur, American Yearbook Company consultant; Mr. Paul Watters for taking senior portraits and organization pictures; Mr. Jerry Crim, who shot underclass pictures; and S. K. Smith Company for the manufacture of the cover. Recognition is given to Mike Walley who gave me assistance on the cover design and created the artwork throughout the book.

Credit goes to my family and close friends for listening to, understanding, and helping me find solutions to problems I faced as a yearbook editor. The year is over—yet memories will remain engraved in our minds and in our Anlibrum.
